

Lazy man becomes more Lazy

Once upon a time, there was a lazy fisherman. Instead of going to the sea and working hard, he would steal fishes from small ponds and lakes situated on others' property.

The house is dark & quite. Everyone seems to asleep. Good, I can cast the net right now.

It is so easy to catch fish this way. It is not worth going to the sea and working hard. I am sure that the fish that I catch tonight will last me
a week.

However, one night the sound of casting the net was very loud waking up the owner.

What was that sound? Did you hear it?

Sounds like a net falling in our pond.

Someone is stealing
my fish!

Run immediately and check.

The owner wakes up the servants...

Ramu, Ramu..
Shyamu, Shyamu..
Wake up! Come here immediately.

Run to the pond!
Someone is stealing
my fishes.

They have woken up!
They are coming in this
way. I am trapped?
What shall I do?

He removed his shirt, applied ashes all over his body and sat beneath a tree in a prayer form.

A cartoon illustration depicting a scene at night. On the left, a sanyasi (a Hindu ascetic) with a long brown beard and hair, wearing a blue dhoti, is seated against a large tree trunk. He has a tilak on his forehead and a sacred thread on his right arm. He is gesturing with his right hand towards two men standing in front of him. The man in the center, wearing a green t-shirt and brown pants with a yellow shawl draped over his shoulders, looks surprised. The man on the right, wearing an orange t-shirt and blue pants with a yellow shawl, looks concerned. The background is a dark blue night sky with a few stars. The ground is a mix of green and brown.

Oh! There is a sanyasi mediating.

Forget it.
Let's go back.

After a while they come back to the master.

What happened, have you found him?

No Sir
It is not a thief.
We saw a holy man
in the garden.

Oh A holy man in my garden! Take me
to him.

Next day morning ...

It is time for me to escape, But who are these people?

Please bless
our child?

Oh! Yes, yes.
God bless you!

Slowly many people started coming with gifts and eatables, asking for various boons.

How strange!

I am not a real Sadhu and yet these people give me so much respect. How much greater respect would they give me if I become a real sadhu? I simply have to meditate. I don't have to work and I get so much to eat.

Moral: Giving anything to a lazy man ultimately makes him more lazy.
